

Enhancing Leadership Resilience

Our working environments are now more demanding and more competitive than ever. Leaders are often the difference that can separate the leading teams from the average. Inspirational and resilient managers must balance transactional and transformational leadership in order to influence and guide their people to high performance.

Through an understanding of how to improve our commitment, control, confidence and reaction to challenge we will become the role model that drives winners. The objective is to deliver high performance in the most challenging of situations. How to be resilient as a leader will assist you in achieving goals, producing better results, getting more done in less time and being more competitive in a positive and mutually beneficial manner.

Danger Opportunity

Leadership resilience will help you keep your head in the most demanding circumstances. The closest Chinese word for this ability consists of two characters. One signifies 'danger' and the other 'opportunity'. Leadership resilience will give you that edge by providing you with the tools and techniques to harness your fear of danger and channel it so that you create opportunity and therefore become more productive rather than self-destructive.
